Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

Claims 1-3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as failing to comply with the enablement requirement. The claim(s) contains subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention. The subject matter of supplying a priority valve of a steering function associated with the module, and a compensation balance allowing fluid deliveries to be adjusted in stages was not properly described in the specification.

Claim Objections

Claim 3 is objected to because of the following informalities: In claim 3 line 2, it appears that "the" should be inserted before "directional control valves" since antecedent basis has been established for directional control valves in claim 1.

Appropriate correction is required.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-3 as best understood are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lech (5,471,908) in view of Johnson et al. (5,138,756).

Lech discloses a multipurpose engineering construction machine of the loader/shovel type including a moving chassis, a driving control station, a loader assembly, a shovel assembly and a number of hydraulic directional control valves actuated by manipulators, with a variable-throughput pump supplying a priority valve 57, 71. Lech, however, does not disclose mounting the directional control valves in a single module on the chassis between a rear axle and a frame supporting the shovel assembly.

Johnson et al., teaches that it is known in the art to mount a module of control valves 39 transversely on the vehicle chassis between a rear axle and a frame 12 which supports the shovel assembly as shown in figures 1 & 4. The module of Johnson et al. is mounted to the frame, directly below the actuation levers. This is a simple and compact design that is easy to design and assemble. Johnson et al., also discloses the directional control valves being laterally arranged.

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the device of Lech by mounting the directional control valves in a single module on the vehicle chassis between the rear axle and a frame supporting the shovel assembly as taught by Johnson et al., to provide a simple and compact design.

Art Unit: 3671

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. The prior art of record discloses various construction machine hydraulic systems.
